The primary objective of the Egypt in Transition course is to explore Egypt's rich history and the impact of ancient accomplishments on the modern Egypt of today. Most of the course time is spent in and around Cairo, North Africa's largest city and the cultural and scientific hub of the Middle East. The course includes visits to monuments, museums, and archeological sites (including the Great Pyramids and Sphinx, the Cairo Museum, the Citadel, the Papyrus Institute), enhancing student appreciation of the historical past and the impact of the old upon the new. Students develop a good understanding of contemporary Egypt through observation of social stratification and selected institutions - educational, medical, political, and religious. Problems encountered by a developing society, and the image of the society by "outsiders," become real to students as they talk with governmental leaders, educational and medical administrators, and families. The course will also provide a unique perspective into the everyday life and drive that evolved particular architecture and sculptural objects in Egypt. A 6-day side trip to Upper Egypt allows students to discover the temples of Luxor and Karnak, King Tut's tomb in the Valley of the Kings, and the Temple of Queen Hatupsut (often called Queen "hot chicken soup"). Another 3-day trip to Alexandria on the Mediterranean, provides a different historical perspective, highlighting the Greco-Roman period in Egypt's past. Students will have the opportunity to test out their bargaining skills at Khan-el-Khalili Bazaar and Kerdasa Village, the country's most active and exciting marketplaces. A unique part of this course emerges from the leaders' unparalleled connections in their native country and in the opportunities for students that exist because of these connections. As this course is interdisciplinary, students have the opportunity to select a particular facet or aspect of Egyptian culture to explore in greater depth. To facilitate individual student interests, it is possible to interview Egyptian professionals in various fields and/or to visit additional sites during our stay in Egypt.
