Health care as we know it today has its roots deeply embedded in a rich history. Recording history and myths provide us with much knowledge about health practices that date back to ancient Greece and the Healing Temples of Asklepios. Exploring the contributions of ancient and modern Greece enhances our understanding and appreciation of the history of health, healing and wellness. Leininger's Theory of Culture Care provides the theoretical framework for this course. This theory is grounded in cultural anthropology and features broad cultural and structural dimensions that offer diverse ways of exploring a culture. These dimensions are technology, religious and philosophical factors, kinship and social factors, cultural values and life ways, political and legal factors, economical and educational factors. Leininger believes that providers of health care must understand the cultural and social factors in order to provide culturally congruent care in a world that has become a "global community" (Leininger, 1997). Using her model, this immersion experience in Greece will provide a student with a deeper understanding of the cultural diversities and similarities that have existed over time and in our present era, not only in matters of health and healing, but in all aspects of daily life.
