We will compare psychology as a science and as a profession in Germany, Austria, and the Czech Republic to the United States. Students will learn how current events are impacting the fields of psychology and education today. We will examine contemporary research and how psychological knowledge is applied in the health system. We will visit professors at leading universities and research laboratories to learn about current research topics and education in psychology. The course is led by two educators, Dr. Goetz has expertise in psychology and Dr. White has expertise in the field of education. Both instructors have experience leading study/travel courses.

We will learn about the origins of psychology in Germany and recent changes in the percentage of students attending the universities. Beginning in the 1960s, large numbers of students in Germany have decided to attend universities, which previously was very restricted. This led to overcrowding. Austria and the Czech Republic also have had more students enroll, without any proportionate increase in their educational budgets. The European Union (EU) is one influence driving the universities to begin offering course credits. One of the EU's objectives is to make it possible for education to be continued in another European country.

This course will allow students to experience three capital cities in central Europe. Our students will learn about the history of these countries and experience their current vibrant cultures.

Participants will have a chance to meet students their own age and talk with them about their goals, ideals, future plans, and experience as a university student.

Comprehensive Fee Includes: Transportation and course arrangements as indicated, hotel accommodations in twin and triple rooms, continental breakfast daily, six group dinners and one cultural performance. (subject to change)

Prerequisites: General Psychology is required. We will meet with professors in the field of Psychology therefore students should understand the methods and theoretical perspectives in the field.
